Gray Wolf Delisting Bill Passes U.S. House

May 1, 2024

Hunter Nation applauds the U.S. House of Representatives for its bipartisan effort in passing Congressman Tom Tiffany's (WI-07) and Congresswoman Lauren Boebert's (CO-03) legislation to delist the gray wolf from the Endangered Species Act. The "Trust The Science Act," removes the gray wolf from the list of endangered species and prevents judicial review of the delisting. This bill gives each state, and the state's wildlife agencies, the ability to manage the gray wolf population as they currently manage all wildlife within each state's border.

"I commend this bipartisan effort from the House of Representatives to bring some science-based sanity to wolf management. Special thanks to representative Tiffany for his support of American hunters and to Speaker Mike Johnson for his leadership to advance this bill," stated Rock Bordelon, Chairman of the Hunter Nation Board of Directors.

"The science is clear, the gray wolf has met and exceeded recovery goals. Today's House passage represents an important first step towards restoring local control over the skyrocketing gray wolf population in Wisconsin. I will continue to fight to get this legislation through the U.S. Senate to protect livestock and pets from brutal wolf attacks," said Congressman Tiffany.

"The recovery of the gray wolf is a remarkable conservation success, and the time has long since passed to manage their exploding population based on science," stated Keith Mark, founder, and President of Hunter Nation. "This is an important achievement for American hunters, game animals, pets, livestock, and wolves. Keeping liberal activist judges out of wildlife management decisions is an important component to this legislation," added Mark.

"The successes of the American Model of Conservation is the envy of the world because it is based on sound science," said Hunter Nation's national spokesperson, Ted Nugent. "The delisting of the gray wolf reflects sound science and will bring balance to the habit and carrying capacity in those areas that have been decimated by unmanaged wolf populations," added Nugent.
